It would be difficult to find a chef more passionate than this one. With ten years of cooking in Hong Kong under his belt denoting his skillful experience with an unwavering innovation found in his fascinating Nordic cuisine. He thinks of his food as more than a cuisine, it's a lifestyle. Pickling, curing, smoking and constantly updating his exciting menus that are brimming with light but filling flavours and intense natural colours that make every plate prettier than the last. In depth knowledge and an intensity dedicated to his craft that includes his grandmother's recipes and annual foraging trips in the forests of his native Finland for incorporation into his recipes; it often feels like eating a history of his homeland. Even though we are honouring him with Chef of the Year, Jaakko Sorsa has proven he's in it for the long haul and could easily be known as Chef of the Decade.
